How to interpret blood gas

Interpreting blood gases is an important skill for all ECC nurses and technicians; this short session will go through step by step how to interpret blood gases and explain what the results indicate. Delegates should leave feeling more confident of their understanding of blood gases and being able to effectively read blood gas results.

Wellness in your practice and in your life

Wellness appears to be quite a hot topic at the moment! The idea has been around for some time but the importance of it, particularly within the veterinary profession is only just being shared. The session will introduce the idea of wellness and how to integrate wellness into the veterinary team's and delegates day to day work. The speaker will also share her own experiences of setting up a social and wellness working group and associated team activities within the talk.
